* Garages part of residential buildings should be classified separately as other non-residential buildings.

For built development, the gross floor area of a building is defined as the floor space measured within its outer walls or within the centre-line of common party walls.

Useful floor area is defined as the floor space measured within the outer walls but including the inner walls. It excludes internal shafts, stairs, balconies, terraces and open roof areas, non-habitable cellars, and in multi-dwellings buildings all common spaces.
